ROLL NO:51

TRAIT ASSESSMENT:

Extroversion (E): A score of 27 suggests that I am somewhat on the extroverted side which means I am outgoing in nature

Agreeableness (A): A low score of 20 means that I resist changing my individual nature for others which I consider is a good thing.

Conscientiousness (C): A decent score of 29 suggests that I am adequately hard working and fairly honest in behaviour. It suggests that I prefer calmness and presence of decency and order around me

Neuroticism (N): A score of 24 which is on the lower side suggests that stress doesn't affect me as much and I keep my composure even under stressful and demanding situations.

Openness to Experience (O): A decent score of 29 suggests that I am broad-minded. This also means that I strive for betterment in academic as well as personal aspects. I also pursue new experience in life

After following the Big Five Test I have scored the highest (29) in 'OPENNESS TO EXPERIENCE' and 'CONSCIENTIOUSNESS' and lowest (20) in AGREEABLENESS.

PERSONAL OPINION:

I personally believe that such tests truly undermine the true capacity of an individual by giving them particular scores. I believe that personality is something which a person isn't inherently born with, it is something that an individual develops and polishes as he/she progresses in life and come across vital life experiences. Personality isn't static in nature as it leans more towards the dynamic aspect. In my opinion such tests are useful to only identify what stage and status of life one is in and they should then take necessary changes to develop themselves as an individual more.
